Earth Day 2014

Our planet is at a turning point. The massive global migration underway now from countryside to cities will demand huge investments in energy, water, materials, waste, food distribution, and transportation over the next 25 years. If the right investments are made now, this unique opportunity will be the catalyst for dramatic changes in the built environment and the fight against carbon emissions and climate change.

Earth Day 2014: The Year of the Climate Voter

The fight against climate change is at an impasse and life on Earth hangs in the balance. Help us save polar bears and other wildlife as their habitats disappear and their food sources become scarce.

Like the polar bear, human life is under threat, too. Storms are becoming stronger, droughts are becoming more severe, and rising sea levels encroach on our cities.

We need an active informed public to stand tall, stop and reverse climate change and protect our children's future!

That's why Earth Day Network is leading the charge to educate and register 300,000 new climate voters in 2014—voters who will support renewable energy and hold their leaders accountable, voters who will help us transition to a more sustainable future.
